Foreword

University libraries face a number of security challenges with their collections (Information Materials). Library collections constitute the bedrock for services provided to the community and serve as important assets to the library. As such, securing and protecting the collections can help libraries provide an effective service in response to the information needs of the university community. Collection security implies the need for libraries to provide, maintain and secure its collection to ensure longevity, accessibility and effective provision of services to users. To achieve this noble objective however, Kirinyaga University (KyU) library need an effective strategy to assess the degree of collection security, breaches they are facing and establish an acceptable level of collection security implementation.
